The results of a comprehensive examination of the Middle East and Persian Gulf's impact on energy supplies, pricing and security by the James A. Baker III Institute for Public Policy of Rice University will be released at a media briefing on Wednesday, April 2, 1997, in the Founders Room of Lovett Hall.

The briefing will start at 9 a.m.

Edward P. Djerejian, director of the Baker Institute, will give an overview of the study and policy recommendations. Amy Jaffe, project coordinator for energy research at the Baker Institute, will review details of the report designed to address the political, economic, social, cultural and religious trends that could affect world energy supplies in the years to come.

Among the policy areas to be discussed are U.S. sanctions, IEA membership augmentation, export routes from the Persian Gulf, and political dynamics in the Middle East region.

Copies of the research report and policy recommendations will be available at the media briefing. If you are unable to attend the briefing but would like to receive a copy of the report, please contact Michael Cinelli, director of the Rice University News Office, at (713) 831-4794.
